

Chris Faith Bio

Having just started my writing career at age 48, this will be a very brief bio. To write comedy, I have been told you must suffer. Starting with being absent 90 days for each of the four high school years, I have had every leg injury possible, including a total knee replacement and a revision to the initial replacement.

I hired one of your previous winners (Buzz McCoughlin) to review my script. His help made finishing this work possible. He also suggested I join the Dramatist Guild, which I did.

While writing the play, I worked with my local theater group, The Actors Circle, who acted as a good sounding Board while the play developed.

This play represents my second effort, the first being shared with my sister, who has been writing for decades. Her encouragement was just the boost I needed when things got tough.

My dad was a record producer, and always considered me the least creative, as my brothers and sisters are all lifelong artists or scientists. I myself have been in Sales for 40 years. A natural story teller, if there ever was one. Thank you for your consideration.
